TYENDINAGA RESERVE

From Our Own Correspondent.

The Sunday Schools in the parish will open on Sunday next at Christ Church at 9:30 a.m. at All Saints 2.15 p.m., and Mission School 3 p.m.

It is to be hoped that all interested will make an effort to clean up Christ Church Cemetery so beautifully situated and visited frequently during the summer months by strangers.

Walter A. Brant is working in addition to his own place, the farm of Jacob B. Brant, Walter has a good team and can put a large crop.

The Rev. Mr. Wilson, of the Shingwauk Home, Sault Ste. Marie, gives a favorable account of the intelligence and progress of the pupils under his charge.

The propositions to improve roads and build a vault on the Reserve were thrown out by the new general council. No funds to spare for new fangled notions.

We have learned that Chief Jacob B. Brant was elected a member of the council of the "Indian Research and Aid Society" at its inaugural meeting in Ottawa last week.

High rents, poor crops and low prices have had the effect of leaving several farms on the Reserve without tenants and consequently in competition.

The engine of the Ferry Steamer Prince Edward is in excellent condition; it is a pity that her captain is not permitted to try its powers.

It is still a great deal of sickness on the Reserve, the consequence of "trapping."

Mr. Thomas Rayburn, for many years one of the best tenants on the Reserve, died on the 24th of April. The funeral services were held at Christ Church on Saturday, after which the body was removed to the Reserve vault at which cemetery the remains will be interred.

Business has been very active about Baker's grain dock the past week; no less than three vessels cleared from there for ports on the Great Lakes.

Andrew, infant son of Samuel Claus, was buried at Christ Church cemetery on Monday, the 29th April.

Mrs. Anderson, of the parsonage, has been fairly successful in making the Parochial collection for the benefit of the Diocese, considering the size of hand.

David Smith, the veteran pruner, has been engaged in the orchards of those in the vicinity who know how to appreciate well trimmed trees. Dave can still handle a saw with skill and his grafting is as good as ever.

The Ferry Arbitrator reported that he will be taking part in the special services which are being conducted successfully by Rev. M. J. Bates, Evangelist, and our esteemed pastor Rev. E. D. Lewis.

Mr. George Kirkpatrick will sing at the concert this evening.

Our village cheese factory commenced operations on Monday last, and is still under the management of Mr. W. Bird.

We learn that Mr. M. B. Lake wishes to remove to the village.

Mr. Truman Cole has just moved into his old home, and moved up in the village having come into possession of the house and lot lately owned by Mrs. R. O. Dickson, Toronto.

The remains of Mrs. McShea and Mabel Baldwin, were brought from Belgrave vault and interred in our village burying ground on Friday last.

Mrs. Clara Clark is suffering from a second attack of the grippe.

Mr. Ernest Farnsworth, of Albert College, has just days back, returned to the village taking part in the special services which he held in the Methodist church, and which are being conducted successfully by Rev. M. J. Bates, Evangelist, and our esteemed pastor Rev. E. D. Lewis.

Mr. George Kirkpatrick will sing at the concert this evening.

ERINVILLE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

P. J. Hogan left on 25th for San Francisco, Cal., where he intends making his future home.

Mr. James Walsh has closed his blacksmith shop and gone west.

Mr. Jno. McIlroy, of Madoc, was visiting at the Commercial House last week.

The grain buyers have closed up after a very quiet week.

Mr. Wm. Taylor has a large force of men working here loading wood and ballast.

J. M. Kenney spent Sunday visiting friends in Marysville.

Mrs. Harrison has recovered from an attack of the measles and is again teaching in the schoolroom.

Mr. B. Murphy, our enterprising merchant, has lately laid in a large stock of new spring goods.

Rev. Father Hartigan, of Centreville, and Rev. Father O'Farrell, of Madoc, have been visiting here.

Mr. B. Murphy, our enterprising merchant, has lately laid in a large stock of new spring goods.

Miss Harriette Stewart, of Flintton, spent a few days visiting here last week.

On Monday 21st Mr. Christopher Smith and Miss Mary Calligan were united in matrimony, at the R. C. Church, by Rev. Father Hartigan.

On 26th, a sad accident occurred by which Mr. Timothy Mahoney lost his life. By some means his horses took flight as he was driving down a hill and became unmanageable. He was thrown from the carriage and was found lying on the snow, causing death in a few minutes. The funeral took place on Monday at the R. C. Cemetery and was largely attended.

A large band of gypsies passed through here last week.

Mr. John Murphy, of Newburgh, spent Sunday at the Phelan House.

THE WHEAT LOUSE AND ITS ENEMIESHow Farmers May Distinguish Beneficial Insects from the Flea.

The wheat louse last season caused a material diminution of the wheat crop in various sections of the country, notably in Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and some of the middle states. The first record of grain louse in this country occurred in 1851, and since that time it has been destructively abundant only at intervals of several years. An early dry spring and a dry summer appear favorable to the pest, and, according to testimony from various sources in Kentucky, wheat that was a few days early in ripening was more easily damaged, but of later planted wheat in some cases, two-thirds of the crop was destroyed.

The following brief description will enable farmers to distinguish these insects from their natural enemies that appear in the field among the lice, and afford the only practical protection against their ravages that is now known: The grain louse is rather less than a tenth of an inch long, with a body a little flattened from above downward, and widest behind. Each has a pair of slender feelers (internally) a jointed beak, which it holds close against the under side of the body when not in use, three pairs of jointed legs and two short tubes, which extend laterally from the body, and of the abdomen. The general color is pale green, varying sometimes to pale brown, with a series of small spots along each side of the abdomen. By sucking the sap of wheat and oats, though not a mark left on the plant, the nutrition is withdrawn, leaving light and shriveled grains.

The enemies of the wheat louse are of two kinds: First, such as devour the prey outright; and second, parasites, or such as lay their eggs on or in the bodies of their victims, where they hatch, and the grub destroys its host. The most portentous effect of the louse is a small block about a tenth of an inch in length. Numerous insects, the other enemies are the lady bird beetles, gypsy fly maggots and the larvae of the chrysopidae. Sucking the sap of wheat and oats, though not a mark left on the plant, the nutrition is withdrawn, leaving light and shriveled grains.

Perhaps the saloon was closed and he had gone farther for the oysters. Yes; that must be it.

It was warm in the kitchen and comfortable and cosy.

Mrs. Cassidy, waiting for her husband to come back, lighted the wick and lit her candle. Noticing his absence, she only thought.

The clock ticked on the table, kettle sang its song. Mrs. Cassidy was back in the country place where she was born, talking at the garden gate with Tom. Then something awoke her. She started up.

From Tom's voice, where was Tom Cassidy?

He had been gone an hour. And the oyster saloon was only around the corner. She must have had a nap.

Frightened and nervous, she ran to the door. All was very still in the street, and the house was dark. The lighted lamp on the table had gone to the upper floors.

Perhaps the saloon was closed and he had gone farther for the oysters. Yes; that must be it.

She went back to the kitchen and waited, but no Tom came.

He had not come that night. At dawn next morning the servant, coming down stairs to kindle the fire, saw her mare crouched up in the corner of the kitchen fireplace moaning and rocking herself to and fro.

When asked what was the matter, she said, "Your master is dead, Sally."

Sally shrieked, but when informed that her lady's reason for this statement were that her husband had gone out intending to return in a few minutes, and was not at home, Sally grumbled and took the affair lightly.

"Depend upon it, Mum," she said, "he's only gone off on a spree. They all do it sooner or later. My last lady didn't have her for three weeks one winter. Mr. Cassidy'll turn us all right again soon."

"Oh!" said Mr. Cassidy. "You never got my telegram?"

"I don't know what you mean by calling," said Mrs. Cassidy. "I only know that to go on that you was a terrible blooming widow, indeed. And that somebody, Jack, has been putting me out of the way as quickly as possible, settling my business—selling my home, indeed. And I called to you."

"I've been to England," said Mr. Cassidy. "You see, as I went down the street with the oyster I can I heard a carriage behind me and a woman on the box. Tricking me, frightening widow, indeed. And that somebody, Jack, if you'd been ill or met with an accident—but to go off and never send a word all this time. I can never forgive you."

"So in I jumped. He told me he was going on board a steamer—the Spread Eagle—and that as there'd been a delay, she'd start about the 21st of the month. And I went to see him off on the 20th. Tricking me, frightening widow, indeed. And that somebody, Jack, if you'd been ill or met with an accident—but to go off and never send a word all this time. I can never forgive you."

"Well, Solina, that's the last I knew until it was broad day. I awoke up to find him looking at me."

A respectable gentleman of his age, well dressed, was looking at her, and as the curtains had been taken to a hospital if he had been seized with a sudden attack of illness in the street; or, at least, if he had been supposed to be intoxicated, clubbed and locked up in a cell for daring to have apoplexy or heart disease, which would have been fatal in that case. Poor old Mr. Cassidy had been a good man, and I searched for a week.

At his place of business a person waited for him at nine that morning by appointment.

Failing in this meeting was very disastrous to Mr. Cassidy.

He had been engaged for the election the next evening for Mrs. Cassidy and himself, and had given them to her to keep safe. Not the most suspicious detective of them all could believe that Mr. Cassidy had voluntarily left home.

He had been engaged for the election the next evening for Mrs. Cassidy and himself, and had given them to her to keep safe. Not the most suspicious detective of them all could believe that Mr. Cassidy had voluntarily left home.

A respectable gentleman of his age, well dressed, was looking at her, and as the curtains had been taken to a hospital if he had been seized with a sudden attack of illness in the street; or, at least, if he had been supposed to be intoxicated, clubbed and locked up in a cell for daring to have apoplexy or heart disease, which would have been fatal in that case. Poor old Mr. Cassidy had been a good man, and I searched for a week.

At his place of business a person waited for him at nine that morning by appointment.

Failing in this meeting was very disastrous to Mr. Cassidy.

Mr. Francis C. Hobson took place of Mr. George Hobson, who had been numerously attended. As the deceased was connected with the Methodist Sabbath School, the pupils of Mr. E. Pringle's class, of which she had been a member, and also members of the classes taught by Mr. A. G. Ramsay, attended the funeral. Mr. Hobson attended the dock they united in singing the hymn, "O think of the Home over there" and as the vessel left the dock they sang "There's a land that is fair, the Land of Day." The proceedings were pathetic and impressive. The remains were interred at Black Creek, Prince Edward County.

Death of Mr. George Phillips.

Mr. George Phillips, chairman of the board of license commissioners of East Hastings, died at his home on the 9th concession of Southport on Saturday morning, April 27th. He had attended the meeting of the board of commissioners at Deseronto the 21st and appeared in good health and spirits, but early on Thursday morning he was seized with a paralytic stroke and continued to sink. He was in his 86th year and had resided in Newark for very many years. He was a member of the Methodist Church and in politics was a Conservative.

High Water.

A correspondent writing to the Intelligencer from Bancroft says that the spring freshet at the mouth of the river has been for some years, the mean water level of the flood has been kept back by a series of dams erected by lumbermen to assist their floating, but this year, owing to the unusual flood, the upper dam put up by Messrs. D. & J. D. Smith, has been washed away.

THE CANADA LIFE.

[From Journal of Commerce.]

The progress of so representative an institution as the Canada Life Assurance Company is not only a fairly accurate indication of the condition of insurance throughout the country but a very fair criterion of the progress of the country itself, and therefore the fact that the report of the company's business for the past year is a prosperous one would seem to show that, in spite of poor harvests and consequently dull trade in certain sections of Canada, the Dominion as a whole has grown in wealth and stability.

The progress of the Canada Life, since its first inception forty-three years ago, has been one of steady and unbroken expansion. Every year has seen an increase in the company's business commensurate with the growth of the country, and a corresponding augmentation of the public's confidence in its stability and enterprise. During the past year both these features were very marked. Although owing to the decision to make the company's fiscal year close on the 31st of December the report for 1859 only covered a period of eight months, the new assurances applied for during that period amount to nearly four and a half millions of dollars, and the total now in force is over forty-nine and a half millions (or nearly one-fifth of the entire insurance done in Canada) while the handsome profits declared, and the number of assureds whose policies are now self-sustaining, will naturally expand still further the number of new applications in the future.

In dealing with the surplus of $1,039,043 available for distribution, the company have acted wisely in preparing for a reduction in the government basis of interest. Undoubtedly the rate of interest procurable from first-class investments is steadily on the decrease, and, although the average rate of interest now ruling is certainly higher than the government basis of 4 per cent, the action of the company in laying aside $250,000 to form a special fund to meet a possible reduction to four per cent is a commendable one, and one that will increase the public's confidence in its soundness. Of the remainder, amounting to $1,609,043, fourteen-fifteenths have been assigned to policyholders, and a bonus of 2½ per cent per annum, or $25 for every $1,000 assured upon the life system, has been declared. The remaining fifteenth has been allotted to the shareholders, which will permit of a bonus of $25 per share being paid to those who are fortunate enough to have selected these securities as an investment.

Throughout, the report bears evidence of skilful and comprehensive management, and of that happy mixture of conservatism and enterprise which alone commands success. Mr. A. G. Ramsay received a well-merited compliment for the success which has attended his efforts during the year, and in his turn thanked the agents and officers for the manner in which they had assisted him. Doubtless the commanding position which the Canada Life now holds will spur them on to renewed exertions, and thus will make the present year one of the most successful in the history of the company.

In this town its business is large and increasing rapidly under the management of the RATHBUN COMPANY and the DESERONTO agency will soon be considered one of its most prosperous agencies.

It is proposed that an abattoir should be erected in Toronto and that the Corporation should manage it.

Col. G. F. Smith, of the Ministry of Agriculture in the Quebec Cabinet, has resigned his portfolio and will retire from political life.

TYENDINAGA RESERVE

From Our Own Correspondent.
An account of the unusual state of the weather, Arbor day was not observed at the Eastern School on the 2nd inst., but on the 7th when the teacher and children had a happy time.

We are glad to see that Chief Isaac Powles is able to be about again after a very serious illness.

The person and Miss Anderson, availed themselves of a pass from the general manager of the N. Y. & C. R. R. to Tweed, to attend the confirmation held there on the 8th.

The teachers of the Reserve attended the Teachers Convention at Belleville on Thursday and Friday; the youngsters enjoyed the holiday.

Debby Brant, of Deseronto, is seriously ill with pneumonia following an attack of influenza.

Those who farm are pretty well on with sowing and crops put in early are looking well. Good prospects for hay on the Reserve this season.

On each Sunday afternoon may be seen a score or more laid assembled for no good purpose, a short distance west of the church lane. There should be no reason for Sunday base ball playing.

We regret to see many Mohawk children playing about the roads instead of availing themselves of the education which they and their parents are fond of.

The Deseronto driving park has attracted a number of Mohawks who have purchased lots and built cottages adjacent to, enable them from the windows to look upon the sports.

Chief J. A. Brant, of Tyendinaga, left for fort-night in the Big Store, giving evidence of the prospective fall payments which crowd of our women were daily seen congregated, prepared to receive goods in advance.

The Ferndale driving fizzle has left the Reserve in a sorry state of the basements with liberty, apparently to the travesties transpiring upon the Reserve. Travellers may now wait until the boys are ready, when Billy ferried, to wait a few minutes was a criminal offence.

Miss Lydia Hill, the efficient organist of All Saints Church, left on Thursday for Winnipeg and other points in the Northwest.

MILL-TOWN.

From Our Own Correspondent.
Mr. John Evans was the guest of Mr. R. F. Pagan on Sunday last.

Mr. W. R. Penick left last week to begin work in the Mountain View cheese factory.

Mr. Adam McAlister, Jr., is laid up with severe attack of Job's comforter.

Our quiet village is somewhat enlivened, by the hands employed in the work on the double track.

The first arch was torn away last week, and an iron bridge substituted, which makes a decided improvement.

Mr. G. H. Clegg, who has started a boarding house, has now about twelve boarders and room for more.

Arbor day was observed in our village, several trees being set out in the ground and schoolyard otherwise improved. The teacher Mr. L. W. Marsh, taking an active part in the affair.

Rev. M. J. Bates, Evangelist, who is conducting services in the Methodist Church, at Shannonville, held a prayer meeting at the school house on Saturday evening which was quite largely attended. We would be glad to welcome him again.

MARYSVILLE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Miss Walrath, of Ernestown, has been spending time with her sister Mrs. Lardy.

Mr. Stapleton and children spent Sunday last at Oshawa.

Mr. J. G. Ryan, of Bradford, Pa., and formerly of this place, was here to attend the funeral of his aged grandmother on Sunday.

Mr. Wm. Poste sustained a severe injury by the handle of a dump cart striking him in the face at the double track work on the G. T. R. one day last week.

Mr. Jas. Traynor is working on the G. T. R. at Stratford, but distance does not deter him from coming home every night to see how his girl is growing.

Mr. Ryan, an old lady who has been living for some years with Mr. Alexander Meagher in this city died on Friday last, and was buried on Sunday.

The deceased lady is said to have reached the age of one hundred and one years.

KINGSFORD.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Miss Santa McCullough has returned home after visiting her sister Mrs. McLavie, Mrs. Mrs. Ann Abbott, who has been very ill for some time, are we glad to learn better.

Mrs. Fred McCullough has returned home from New York.

Mr. David McCullough is much better and progressing favorably.

The Forest Mills Cheese Factory have been making six cheese a day during the last week but although few patrons have as yet sent in their orders.

The Woollen Factory is again running and the bell is heard as in former times.

We frequently see ten or fifteen vehicles leaving the village in a carriage in one day all loaded with a dollar and much admired.

Large numbers of customers are daily seen in his shop for repairs, &c. Our harness maker has all he can do to fill orders. Our shoe maker is also rushing his business.

Our men still holds the fort and all new stores soon close.

The fourth quarterly meeting was held on Saturday and Sunday last. The finances were very satisfactory and on Sunday the services were instructive, profitable and well attended.

The Richmond Council met on Monday and passed a by-law against the willow marsh.

The Tyendinaga Council are unanimous that the council have not had to pay large damage for accidents.

Mr. James H. McAlister has been very ill. Several cases have been offered for general proficiency and special branches in our school.

Mrs. Ryan, grandmother of Mrs. Alexander Meagher, died last week at the patriarchal age of 107 years.

Mr. Schermerhorn is, we are glad to learn, better.

Mr. Andrew Gering left for Rochester last week.

Sunday will be service in St. Patrick's next week.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough and Bronchitis.

is already much missed by his young friends. It is said, out of sight out of mind; but no with—well, I won't tell—but that long drive last Sunday.

Mr. Charles Simpkins, who is attending Albert College, spent Sunday under the parental roof.

Mr. Oliver, Brighton, is spending a few days with his brother, Mr. R. J. Oliver.

Mr. Wm. Greatrix has removed to Bridgeport.

Mr. C. McFarlane is slowly recovering from a severely sprained ankle, caused by a runaway team. Mrs. Wm. Mundell is suffering from a bad cold.

The Mohawk cheese company began operations last Monday. Conditions are favorable for a success this season; the old factory having been torn down, and a new one soon to be erected, and a new modern improvements erected in its stead.

Mr. D. Morden had the contract and formed a first class job. Mr. E. Bennett, who has the reputation of being one of the best cheese-makers in the country, has been engaged and we hope he will be a first class quality of cheese will be manufactured.

Seedings operations having been completed the farmers are resting on their oars, for a little while.

They have enjoyed a favorable spell for putting in the seed, the weather being cool and the ground in good order.

However there is scarcely any growth as yet as warmer weather is necessary to cause the seed to germinate.

Fall wheat is not injured

as much in this section as was thought it would be.

A great deal of clover, however, was badly injured by frost and died during the past winter.

Quite a number of farmers about here are trying to expand growing of the two row crops.

It is a fine quality of seed, and it is a doubtful question if as good a sample can be produced as our warm, dry climate causes the seed to mature too rapidly making it too flinty and hard for the threshers.

CHAPTER III.

LOVERS AND FRIENDS.

It was a relief to reach home, and old home at my age. I had not been there for years. The boys had grown to men, and we were all agreeable to me without tormenting me after the manner of Touchy. I anticipated two weeks of peace and happiness. There was hardly time for all. Bright Hale had grown rich, and had goodness known how many turnouts, and a yacht beside. Ernest Marvel, the boy I cared for, was now tall and handsome. He was a member of club, had concert tickets and art packages, and there was no moment of day for which he had not some plan. Then Harry Blake owned a big store, and so on, and so on. My heart kept leaping all the time.

Bright saw the most of me. He had a breezy way of monopolizing one, and beside he was just starting on a business trip to California. The last Friday of my stay he went away. He shook hands, kissed my cheek, airyly reminded me that I was his best girl forever, and that I might use his carriage as often as I wished.

Stanley Ernest called. I rushed down to the parlor complaining that I thought myself forgotten.

"No, I couldn't forget you, even a minute," Ernest said somberly. A queer little chill went down my back, but I dismissed it. "I thought," he went on, "you would be in mourning for Bright."

"He is not dead," I returned, stupidly, "I'll see him again."

"I suppose so," Ernest answered, and fell into heavy silence, which he presently broke by a burst of light talk, quite unlike his usual way. I complained of it, and since he did not mend, I cried:

"I can't talk like yourself, you should talk at all; and forthwith began playing jigs and breakdowns on the piano, till he stopped his walk up and down, saying hoarsely:

"For heaven's sake, don't!"

"Aren't you rather imperative and emphatic?" I questioned.

"When do you go?"

He seemed hurt and explained gravely that he meant to ask when did I leave the city.

"To-morrow morning, 9 o'clock," I answered.

He resumed his walk. I moved restlessly and sighed heavily, and made any disclosures, confessions as possible, till he said: "I know, Katie, but he goes so much to tell you and the time is short. I am afraid to say it all, but I cannot let you go without speaking. That's it! You're going! It tears my heart out and I can only think of the pain."

I got a dreadfully solemn feeling. From some inspiration right from my heart I walked over to him, and laying my hand as near his shoulder as I could reach, I said, in a very gentle voice for me: "Please, dear Ernest, we have known each other all our lives—ever since I was a little girl I have been fond of you, and you shall be sorry to say good by, but it will not tear my heart out, not yours either. He never failed to speak to me on 'You must not think me changed because for a few years you have not seen me. You and I are friends, just as we were at school. We can never be any more or any less. It is a lovely thing to be friends so, and it would be cruel if I should or you should do anything to spoil or change it,—would it not, Ernest?" No, don't answer. No one should think twice of me. Ernest, I am just as I used to be—selfish and thoughtless and frivolous. I haven't a bit of heart, dear Ernest—indeed I haven't, except so much as can come with regret if any one for whom I care comes to pain through me. Please understand, Ernest, and don't let's talk of this any more—please, please, for my sake!"

I had been hurried on by some frightened impulse. It seemed to me that it would be the saddest thing in the world if Ernest should change. The tears were in my eyes at the thought. His face softened and gleamed as if from an inward light. He clasped his hands over mine that was pushed against him, and, bending, kissed my fingers. Then he heaved:

"I know, Katie, you are warning me. Out of your gentle heart you are trying to save me the pain of the mistake which, for all that, I must make. It is too late, and I must go through with it, mistake or not. Do you think I could see you as I am and my heart not grow cold? I'll tell you where there is hope for me! I am a big fool, and I do know much about love; I should seek out things, but it is humble enough, is it not, if I put my knee to the ground—so—and lifting my arms only to touch your hands, tell you that I love you—I love you—I love you."

He turned his face with a sort of sob against my dress. I slid a limp, miserable wretch, into the chair beside me, and began rubbing his head, and I said, more or less, "He was so sorry, that for the world I would not give him pain, but that I knew I should be a wicked girl if I did not honestly tell him the truth. He stood unsteadily asking: "And that is?"

"That I do not love you the least in the world more than I always have," I made answer, crying softly: "that—oh forgive me, Ernest—I know I never shall feel for you in that manner."

He took me close in his arms, kissing my forehead and cheek and eyelids. His lips were cold. Then he put me from him, saying vaguely, "Good by!"

"No, no, Ernest," I cried; "you must not go that way. You must care for me as you always have—as I care for you, and always will. Our dear friendship must not be broken up. I cannot spare it; I will not. You will forget that you ever felt like this!"

"Do you think so?" he asked—and his eyes had such a look of sober pain in them that I felt as if I must be right. The touch of his hand still made me forget even my own command. Tell me to stay and I will be gentle, and never forget till I have won you; but ask me to stay as your friend, and I—"

"Have I no right?" I cried; "how can you take from me a friendship I have never forfeited? The sincerest proof of which I have just given. I never wanted you to love me, and I won't have it. I won't give you up. I hate people to love me. Why could you not be nice, and fond of me, as Bright Hale, and I, and Touchy?"

At the name his face darkened. "Had Bright Hale asked your answer it would have been different," he said doggedly.

I gave a small scream of rage. "Oh! Bright would not do such a thing. He is too kind to repay a girl for a friendship which had lasted nearly as long as has, by falling in love with her, and then throwing her off. You propose doing Bright Hale's way; not do so cruel, unkind, ungenerous, dreadful, disastrous a thing as loving me. He—"

A discreet rustle at the door and Mary entered. "Mr. Hale, Miss"—she said, and in walked Bright. Ernest broke into laughing.

"You see?" he said, and then to Bright: "Good luck, old fellow. I am just leaving."

I lifted my hands in protest against his hasty departure, and with a hurried greeting to Bright, followed Ernest to the door, saying: "Please forgive if all and be friends." He drew a long breath that made me feel his heart was breaking, and said hoarsely, his arms straining about me: "Let me say once more that I love you. I shall have no right soon."

"Ernest, too," said he, the thought just coming to him.

Then he lifted my face, and looked at me. I was not afraid, but when I could not see any more for tears I asked again: "Be friends, Bright."

He drew a long breath, and said:

"You're a brave little girl, Katie." After a moment he said on, and then every one is falling in love with, and wondering who you are?" Well, at least I would say that. "I'll—be friends, Katie."

The words came slowly, and his lips, although he smiled, were so white that I listened to show how much I appreciated his goodness.

"Thank you—thank you," I said, adding earnestly: "I love you more for that than ever I did before."

His face twitched and he said, smiling again: "It would be kind to choose your words better, Katie." Then after a long stare at me, he said with complete return to his old manner: "Good-by, Katie. I must get away from you now, but I do not think any more of all this. Only remember, no matter how many lovers you have, you're one friend."

"Thank you, Bright," I said, again laughing aloud from happiness.

He made a face half comic and half serious. "Don't laugh. I am going to shoot myself, but that's what they will all do, isn't it?"

"Or drown themselves," I observed.

"Or jump to the devil."

"All right," I'll take my choice when I get out. Good-bye, Katie."

I stood on a hassock, reached my arms about his neck, and kissed him on both cheeks, saying gratefully: "You have been awfully kind to me, Bright, and indeed I'm very thankful."

"Well, you ought to be," he assented, grimly. Wringing my hand he said another cheery "Good-bye; remember your friend" and was gone.

I sighed a big sigh. Ah! how much friendliness was there in anything else, I thought gratefully.

CHAPTER IV.

A COMPLICATION OF FEVER.

Rehearsals. A bitter March day. The light drizzling through the windows in the room, shouting to each other from where they were covering the chairs with white cloths. Everybody cross, and with reason. Called at 10, we had waited a good half hour for Mr. Butcher and his leading lady, the day before I had come two minutes late to find the entire company assembled. Mr. Butcher, watch in hand, pacing the stage, and Miss Loewella shivering ostentatiously in her fur. Mr. Butcher informed me that such a thing as being two minutes late was unheard of, and that probably I had caused Miss Loewella to take cold.

Said now to Mr. Ned, who sat beside me on the roll of carpet, "When they come, I will tell them you have probably not seen me. You must be very tired."

"You've got to, Katie," I returned steadily; "you shall have spoken before I went away; but at least I have come back all this way to say it!"

"You shall not," I interrupted again.

"I won't hear it. I haven't it to hold you up a shining example, and swearing by your mother!" What I do to deserve such an award? and I stamped off after the others.

"You've got to, Katie—yourself, that's all, Katie—the sweetest, frankest, most winsome self that ever breathed. You have looked at me from two of the clearest blue eyes that ever won a man's heart. You have spoken from two lips that are sweeter to look at than any lips in the world—you!"

I have not! I've got two eyes and a nose and a mouth, like any other girl. I'm like any one else, and I don't deserve to be treated so. Go home before you say any more. I won't hear it!"

"Katie, darling, you must hear it. A man takes no such trip as I have to be set aside without hearing. I love you as much as can be, Katie—why you shall have everything you want!"

"I don't want it; I put in breathlessly.

"Then you needn't have it," he replied without a pause, and going on as if I had not spoken; "I love you from the tip of the curl on your forehead, through every pink finger to the sole of your tiny shoe, and I will be answered."

"My shoes are not tiny. I wear sevens—sevens, do you hear? and I haven't heard a word you've said. I told you I wouldn't."

"Then," said he, somehow settling aside the chair and holding me fast in his arms, "I will say it again. I love you from the top of your head to the sole of your foot, of both feet, and I want the right to go on loving you more and more." I was being kissed on hair and eyes and lips. I struggled free. "To think that you, of all persons, should so ill use me!"

"Katie, Katie!" he was saying brokenly. "I don't be ill—for my sake."

I thought very kind, and laid my hand over his, saying gratefully: "How good you are! I'm only lazy—don't mind, whatever should you cry for?"

He hid his face in the folds of the shawl over my throat, and said, over and over again:

"God help me, I love you—I love you!"

I struggled with the heavy stupidity which fever had laid upon me, saying it was all a dream, and not true, and I wouldn't.

"Then, when I felt his lips hot and eager on my throat and hands and eyes, I pleaded that he must not and that I was very ill, whereat he dragged himself away."

"Are you a fool?" he inquired.

"No," I retorted, "not quite; and what intelligence I have is concentrated on trying to make out your giant mind to you, direct your giant mind to you, expressing yourself clearly, we should get along well."

"It is," and I thought of Ernest. "I have been answering ever since you came. I do not love you; you never did. I never will."

"Be sensible, Katie. Don't speak so harshly. A man's heart and life are of some value. I deserve some consideration."

"Oh, Bright," I begged, beginning to cry, "do not love me. You should see I have no heart. I care only for friends. Soo as a man loves me, so I am to him. I am, friend, Bright, I want one so. I am the truth. He stood unsteadily asking: "And that is?"

"That I do not love you the least in the world more than I always have," I made answer, crying softly: "that—oh forgive me, Ernest—I know I never shall feel for you in that manner."

He took me close in his arms, kissing my forehead and cheek and eyelids. His lips were cold. Then he put me from him, saying vaguely, "Good by!"

"No, no, Ernest," I cried; "you must not go that way. You must care for me as you always have—as I care for you."

"You must provided as it is a matter of business. And through it all—Mr. Ned doing every thing."

"You're a liar!" they both retorted simultaneously, springing at each other. Some one caught each of them, and presently Touchy was getting his fur hat off. The touch of your eyes made me forget even your own command. Tell me to stay and I will be gentle, and never forget till I have won you; but ask me to stay as your friend, and I—"

"Oh, I know," I interrupted; "you will shoot your eye out. Because I offered to have you for your eyes, and you're not nice, and you're not good, and you're not to be nice, and fond of me, as Bright Hale, and I, and Touchy."

"I have no right," I cried; "how can you take from me a friendship I have never forfeited? The sincerest proof of which I have just given. I never wanted you to love me, and I won't have it. I won't give you up. I hate people to love me. Why could you not be nice, and fond of me, as Bright Hale, and I, and Touchy?"

"I have a small scream of rage. "Oh! Bright would not do such a thing. He is too kind to repay a girl for a friendship which had lasted nearly as long as has, by falling in love with her, and then throwing her off. You propose doing Bright Hale's way; not do so cruel, unkind, ungenerous, disastrous a thing as loving me."

"I have a face turned gray. "You dare not speak so to me," he whispered, hoarsely, his hand gripping behind his shoulder as he looked at me, and his eyes gleamed savagely.

I was so frightened that I could make no move at all when he seemed ready to crush the life from me, and could not take my eyes from his, angry and cruel as they were. He must have seen how afraid I was, for a sudden he loosed me, calling himself in a miserable, shamed way a brat.

I would not let him turn away, and I said in a small, tremulous voice:

"Please, Bright, look at me. You can't make out who I am. I don't love you, can you not? First make sure of that. Then be kind and generous and good, and don't you throw me off. I cannot lose all my friends."

"Ernest, too," said he, the thought just coming to him.

Then he lifted my face, and looked at me. I was not afraid, but when I could not see any more for tears I asked again: "Be friends, Bright."

He drew a long breath, and said:

"You're a brave little girl, Katie." After a moment he said on, and then every one is falling in love with, and wondering who you are?" Well, at least I would say that. "I'll—be friends, Katie."

The words came slowly, and his lips, although he smiled, were so white that I listened to show how much I appreciated his goodness.

"Thank you, Bright," I said, adding earnestly: "I love you more for that than ever I did before."

His face twitched and he said, smiling again:

"I'll—will."

"You'll be compromised," I objected.

"And I'll—will you?"

"Can't afford it," I said fretfully.

He looked at me in a queer, earnest way and then turned sharply from the room.

Presently our business manager, a prosperous looking fellow, with a suave manner and a big diamond pin, came in.

"I understand you are not well, Miss Tempest," he said softly, "and that you refuse to have a fire. I will order one."

"I will have nothing I can't afford, thank you."

"You don't understand," he insisted sweetly. "Miss Loewella is not due for several days. If you fail to play the theatre close, I must therefore, as a business matter, insist upon your taking the doctor and I shall order you a friend and doctor."

I struggled to my feet and answered back: "You may order me a coach and four if you like. Don't be afraid, I will play; only, when Miss Loewella returns, I hope then I may be allowed to die, if I like, without being insulted!"

Our genial manager said soothingly that I had an awful temper, and softly left the room. I lay on the sofa, crying, and feeling very small and lonesome. I was all over tears when Mr. Ned brought the doctor in. He was young and strong looking. He had a vigorous hand on my wrist, pushed my hair back in a womanly fashion, and said quietly: "A very sick girl. She must go to bed and stay there."

"Oh, no, no, mustn't," I said. "She fails to play the theatre close. So she can't go to bed."

"Can't you live, child?"

"I think of the theatre," I answered, adding earnestly: "One must do her duty, mustn't she, doctor?"

He looked at me seriously and kindly.

Then he said I must do as I thought right. He mixed some stiff glasses, from his case, gave Mr. Ned a lot of instructions, said he would see me in Philadelphia, where was his home, and departed with a parting admonition to me to take such care of myself as I could.

"How can he be here if he lives in Philadelphia?" I asked crossly, for being sick seemed to spoil my temper.

"He visits here to lecture at a medical college," Mr. Ned said absently.

"I lay back, remembering how firm and kind his hands had been. Then things blurred and my eyes shut up. I came from my half swoon to find Mr. Ned kneeling beside me with his arms across me.

"Katie, Katie!" he was saying brokenly. "I don't be ill—for my sake."

I thought very kind, and laid my hand over his, saying gratefully: "How good you are! I'm only lazy—don't mind, whatever should you cry for?"

Mr. Ned! Mr. Ned, to whom I clung in dumb gratitude for his kindness, in spite of the nightmare of what he had told me, and kept on telling me. I was so afraid, too, that people would see. The good man being blamed for making a house where he was always before. For I was good, and over and over I lifted a weak hand to shut out the hungry light in his eyes, and said that if he would only try, in a little while it would all pass and his heart would go back where it belonged. Each time he would answer:

"No, no," I cried, and begged him to stay. But he meant his "good-by" for when we got to the hotel he had departed bag and baggage. It was two years before I saw him again. Then we met in railroads. He looked to me, said "Good-bye, my heart, it's Katie." With that he tucked me under his arm and pranced with me into the ladies' waiting room.

"Katie, my heart," he said, barking all over at a wee, blue-eyed thing.

"I'm happy as a king," Touchy went on; "though Bright here doesn't let me call my soul my own."

I gazed at him with a look of wonder and admiration.

THE LITTLE ROSE OF SHANE.

I saw a little rose,
As I went down the lane,
"I'll come back again—
To-morrow, or perhaps some day,
May open the buds upturned,
And I will call my mate,
My sweet white rose of Shane.

So morn I went back the way,
And needed not the rain
The little rose of white, white sun,
Was still, although the sun was bright.

It was the sunset, sweet sunset sun,
The sweetest, sweetest sun,
Yet I had heard the whispering,
In the dripping of the water.

As it failed to pain,
"Ah, man! some one is a' comin' away
My rose, white rose of Shane."

Some Causes of Deafness.
Dr. Francis Dowling, in a paper which he read at a recent meeting of the Cincinnati Academy of Medicine, stated that "between the ages of 10 and 40 at least one person in three is subject to partial deafness. The great majority of cases of impaired hearing date from the time of birth. At least five-sixths of the cases of impaired hearing are hereditary, and are largely owing to a too close consanguinity of the parents. Deafness is more prevalent among males than among females, owing to the fact that the male is more liable to the vicissitudes of climate. There is much more deafness in America than in Europe, and this is due to a more general use of scientific instruments such as telephones, where one ear is used to the exclusion of the other."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Getting Information in Samaria.
I am free to confess that I did not meet the proverbial good Samaritan as I journeyed through this much favored country. If one meets a tiler of the soil he will smile off as far as the narrow path will allow, and scowlingly watch the traveler's approach. The offer of a pauper will bring him to a standstill.
"How far is it to Nazareth?"
"God knows," comes the fervent answer.

"How long will it take to go there?"
"As long as God pleases," he answers, with a shrug of his shoulders and a pull at his pipe.

"Shall I reach there by noon?"
"If God permit."

"But may I hope to make the distance in an hour?"

"As God may direct," he answers, walking away.
"Is Nazareth distant, or is it very near?"

"There," he answers, moving his finger through a wide arc. "If one extracts a more neighborly spirit than this from a Samaritan he must have the mysterious power of a dervish.—Century."

This Man Seeks the One.
A letter, bearing the postmark of a leading city in Tennessee, was received at the office of the secretary of state, in Hartford. There was nothing remarkable about the letter itself; it related merely to a business matter. The curious thing about it was the letter head, which bore in large type the name of the writer, with these words: "Candidate for county court clerk, August, 1890," while in one corner was printed: "The office is very valuable and respectable. I believe that I am competent to fill it. I desire that the income from it would make me comfortable the remainder of my life. My work here is closely confined now, but I will see you all before election time. To the people among whom I was born, among whom I have lived, and whose interests are mine, I appeal for assistance in this race. Very truly," etc. Even the return stamp on the envelope bore the legend: "Candidate for county court clerk" after the sender's name.—New Haven Palladium.

Danger from Milk.
Any animal which gives milk is therefore to a great extent protected from disease. What would otherwise cause sickness has an escape valve through the milk secretion. The only statement of this fact ought to comprise the necessity of giving much cows pure water. The unhealthfulness of milk is a summer, from which so many children sicken and die, is more frequently caused by giving the cows impure water than by anything else.—New Orleans Picayune.

Fine Proof Stables.

Fine proof stables are not uncommon in Germany and are very simply built. Timber-like railings are placed from three and a half to four and a half feet apart, arch corrugated iron posts are placed and filled in with a mixture of cinders and lime, making it deep enough to protect the timbers. The trap or door to reach the loft is made of sheet iron, filled in with the same compound. This kind of fireproofing is very cheap and very effective.

A Nugget Weighing Fifty Pounds.
A gold nugget, weighing fifty pounds, has been found in the Tote Saunders mine in the Uwharrie valley, Montgomery county, N. C., which was discovered at a depth of about 18 feet from the surface. The nugget is 11 inches in length, 6 inches in width and 8 inches in thickness, and is the second largest nugget ever found.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Pedestraining.
Mrs. C.—Just think of it! Poor Mrs. Blank has died, and her young child is not able to walk.

Mrs. D.—Not able to walk! I dare say that an inconsolable widow will make it an excuse for marrying again that the child needs a step-mother right off.—Times-Sentinel.

Not altogether a New Departure.
"My sir," said the barber, when he had finished flaying the stranger alive, "competition kills us all! There's no money in this stand, and I've just about concluded to open a butcher shop!"

"And will you close this one?" the victim gasped feebly.—Boston Times.

FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN.

The Editor of the Tribune.

As you wished me to give you some notes concerning my second trip across the continent, I will give you some which I think will interest your readers in my hurried trip.

Leaving Toronto on the 11th of April at 11 o'clock, p. m., I found myself packed into a car which was advertised to leave with the excursion party but on account of a snow storm was unable to get it back in time to take the party direct to Fort Erie. Finding a car which was allotted to me with another occupant also, I quietly bought his interest out and from that time until Wainwright was reached I had splendid sleeping accommodation. Let me tell you, there is no place in the world where there are a number of silver mines. This place is a mining town having on the surface in existence a few weeks and in which large shipments of valuable things new every time. Reaching the Glacier house in time for dinner and after leaving there, we passed over the loop, one of the greatest engineering feats ever done in the world. I will give you some which I think will interest your readers in my hurried trip.

The Eliza Ross.

The Eliza Ross will go on the Picton Trenton route next week. Mr. Evans has completely changed her appearance this spring, and she will be one of the prettiest craft in the river. About two hundred passengers will be carried, leaving at the regular hour. She has been remodeled, leaving the seated portion. The staircase has been placed in the centre coming out at each side facing the gangway. The kitchen has been removed to the stern end of the boat, and the dining room is located in the bow. The boat has a deck of 1000 square feet, and the deck has been brought down to the promenade deck. A new set of iron feathering wheels have been placed in position, and the paddles widened so as to give increased speed. The engines have been removed and the engines have been removed and painted, and this staunch steamer now presents a very attractive appearance.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Burke's Uncle Tom's Cabin Company arrived in town on Tuesday morning and immediately created enthusiasm among the pleasure loving public. The street was packed with people, and whole portions of the town were thronged. The boat had played a number of selections in a manner which left nothing to be desired. Few travelling companies are provided with such an excellent musical organization. After ten o'clock the boat was crowded and the company was well received.

The Bishop of the Diocese will hold the approaching confirmation in St. Mark's Church on Tuesday next the 13th inst. at 7 p.m. in the hall. The confirmation is expected to be very interesting one. Some handsome texts are being made to place over the windows in the Church. The young people are meeting each night of this week in the basement to get them ready.

JUBILEE SINGERS.

The Toronto Globe says: The famous Jubilee Singers favoured an appreciative audience on Tuesday evening, 18th March, in the Shaftesbury Hall, with a dozen characteristic songs. Those who attended the concert in the same place to night may expect a rare treat.

The Toronto World says: The Concert given last night (18th March, 1890) in Shaftesbury Hall, by the Colored Jubilee Singers was a delight to all. The audience was composed of persons who came to hear the Jubilee Singers sing, and were greatly delighted.

The Jubilee Singers sang again in the same place on Wednesday evening, 20th March, and were again greatly delighted.

The Toronto Empire says: Last night (18th March, 1890) the Jubilee Singers thoroughly delighted the audience which assembled to hear them. Mr. Cocklin's singing was the feature of the evening and was warmly enjoyed. To night the Jubilee Singers sing again in the same place.

The Jubilee Singers will appear at the Methodist church, Deseronto, next Tuesday evening. Silver collection taken at the door.

Mrs. Betsy Averill of New Preston, Conn., a pensioner of the war of 1812 and the oldest pensioner on the rolls of the government, celebrated the 103rd anniversary of her birth yesterday, and what courage was once theirs, what romance and beauty of character flavored their lives, and now all gone. The same writer credits their "best friend in Canada" with the prophecy that, at the present death-rate, there will not be any Indians left in the plains in fifteen years. This picture, though shaded, is not for the truth. The Indians of the plains appear even less fitted to meet the new conditions caused by the advent of the white man than the tribes of the east. All that devoted missionaries could do and all that efforts could be made have failed to make the Indian cultivators of the soil. They readily imitate the worst vices of white men, but seem incapable of imitating their virtues. The Indian will never amount to anything in this country until the present system in which he is treated as a ward and a child is abolished.

A SAD DESCRIPTION.

The Montreal Star says that a recent writer describes the Indians of the Canadian Western territories as a lot of idle, lazy vagabonds, rapidly dying of starvation and bad habits.

Beggars and tramps, what pride there is, and what courage was once theirs, what romance and beauty of character flavored their lives, and now all gone.

The same writer credits their "best friend in Canada" with the prophecy that, at the present death-rate, there will not be any Indians left in the plains in fifteen years.

This picture, though shaded, is not for the truth.

The Indians of the plains appear even less fitted to meet the new conditions caused by the advent of the white man than the tribes of the east.

All that devoted missionaries could do and all that efforts could be made have failed to make the Indian cultivators of the soil.

They readily imitate the worst vices of white men, but seem incapable of imitating their virtues.

The Indian will never amount to anything in this country until the present system in which he is treated as a ward and a child is abolished.

-WE EXPECT TO OPEN-

By Saturday some of the biggest bargains ever seen in Canada. We have bought a lot of Shirts, Cottontails, Towels, Dress Goods, Linings, Ginghams, Gloves, etc., from the estate of a large wholesale house lately failed, and will give you the benefit of our bargains. All we ask is a fair percentage of commission for handling them, the price to you will be less than the regular whole sale prices, and at least than you can find them for anywhere else.

4,000 yards of Shirting (just think of it), enough to make a shift each for 1000 men and some boys; and the county will be richer by at least $280 (or the men who buy them will) than if we hadn't got hold of them. We will sell the best Standard Shirting 15c. goods for 11c. a yard. The regular 14 and 12c. qualities for 9c. The regular 11 and 10c. quality for 8c. A good quality Jean waist lining worth 12c. for 9c. A fine 13c. Silesia for 9c. The best quality real English Oxford Shirting 20c. goods for 15c. Cottontails worth 25c. for 18c. A lot of heavy checked Ginghams worth 15c. for 10c. a yard. A fine, fine, fine quality, all linen huck towels, with red stripe border, 10c. each, and on up in the same proportion. Splendid real Turkish towels, bath towels, and Turkish Terry by the yard for bath towels. Dress Goods for 20c. Beautiful things in black and colored Alpaca Lustres.

TOWELS.

130 dozen of them at prices you never heard of before, ridiculously low prices, in fact we have made a table especially for Towels, and will hold a Towel Sale on Saturday, selling a fair Towel NOT at 5c. EACH, that would be cheap enough, but 5 CENTS A PAIR. A fair all linen huck towel, 7c. a pair. All with fast, fast, fast, fine, fine, fine quality, all linen huck towels, with red stripe border, 10c. each, and on up in the same proportion. Splendid real Turkish towels, bath towels, and Turkish Terry by the yard for bath towels.

TRUE STORY OF A WALL STREET HERO
BY HENRY CLEWS.

CHAPTER I.
AN EARLY PASSION.

Annie Stockwell's blue eyes looked straight at the viewer.

Thirty years ago Daniel Hardy was employed as a teamster for a saw mill in Posket, Vt. Born on a farm, his boyhood came to an early end, for stubborn nature yields her harvests in the Green Mountain state only after a severe struggle, and even infantile hands are tired for the work. Little knowledge had he of such things as a day at the district school when he was just big enough to be in his mother's way, and not strong enough to be of service, had resulted in his acquiring a possible knowledge of the alphabet and various forms of mischief, and during his teens an occasional term at the winter session had added to his learning the rudiments of "licking and a certain facility to misspell most words of two syllables and many of one.

It was while he was a mere child that the passion of his life took root in his mind. Awkward, ungainly, and not the best, he was utterly helpless when Annie Stockwell's blue eyes looked straight into his own. They met each other at school during the long, hot summer months, when they dozed over their primers instead of playing in the open air. Little Dan looked longer at the bench where Annie sat at his book, but when she turned toward him up went his hoisted and dog-eared primer before his face, and his blood shone through his sunburnt cheeks. Often times Annie found a big red apple or a yellow pear in her desk, but Dan never told who put it there, and when she tried to smile her appreciation across the school room, for she knew well enough, he looked steadfastly at the blackboard.

So separation ran along for years. When Daniel's school days were over he saw Annie at "meetin'" and at sewing circles and tea parties, and walked home with her from all such gatherings as came to an end after dark. He even went to spelling bees in the old school house and stood up to be regularly followed by the first word put to him in order that he might sit proudly by and watch all the contestants drop into their seats, one after another, until Annie should be left alone the victor.

At last one day came when Mr. Stockwell, having slowly awakened to a recognition of his daughter's superior talents, consented to send her to a boarding school. Just when relations existed between Daniel and Annie, at the time of separation it is difficult to determine. They may have talked of marriage, but it is more probable that, having grown up side by side, they left the future to take care of itself, each content with a tacit acknowledgement of trust, as there certainly was of affection, in the other. It was generally believed in Posket that they were engaged.

Daniel was at the postoffice when Annie took the stage to go away. They merely said "good-by" to each other there, but when the dust of wheels and horses' hoofs had obscured the clumsy vehicle in the distance, and Daniel still remained at it, the postmaster said with that kindly impertinence found unclassified in the country, and thinly cloaked by euphemistic phrases in the city:

"Well, Dan'l, I suppose you 'n Annie'll git married soon's she's done schoolin' has?"

Daniel started, and his brown cheeks reddened as of old. He thrust his hands deep into his pockets, and, turning with a sly smile, replied:

"You 'n Annie, Mr. Sparks?"

Then he walked slowly away.

At this time Daniel Hardy was 20 years old, a grown man, whose stalwart frame was yet angular and unrefined by lack of full maturity. He was strong enough, heaven knows, for any kind of physical labor, and he never lacked for a job.

That stern patience that is cultivated by New England farming was characteristic of him, and with it was a steadfast sense of purpose that even his neighbor recognized. He never admitted anybody to his confidence, and invariably remained in the background.

Annie was at school three years. At long intervals she visited Posket, and these were reasons of—I was about to say unallowable bliss for Daniel. The phrase would be strictly true of the first visitation. Boarding school life was so new to her that it had not affected her thought or her demeanor at all, and her talk to Daniel was of nothing but the strange scenes and people and her delight at seeing her home.

By the end of another year, however, a change was apparent to all; not in her relations to her lover, but in her appearance, her carriage and her speech. Everybody, except Daniel, regarded this as an improvement; he hardly knew whether he liked it or not.

There were keener observers in Posket than Daniel Hardy. The good women of the village were quick to discern the change, and to understand them. One day a neighbor who called at the Stockwells' discovered Annie, with her sleeves rolled up, scrubbing milk pail in the kitchen.

"I don't 'spect, Annie," said this neighbor, "that you'll go into the kitchen after your edication's finished; an' then what'll Dan'l Hardy do for his break-fast?"

Annie blushed and gave her pan an extra vigorous rub. Then she tossed her head, and answered:

"I don't mean that any man who is to be my husband shall have to get a hired girl."

Then she laughed and avoided further remarks on the subject by talking of cat-tail marshes. The neighbor went away highly pleased, and twenty-four hours had not passed before the episode, with various pleasant additions, had been narrated to Daniel Hardy. The next evening he called at her house.

"Howdy, Dan'l, glad to see yo'," said Squire Stockwell, as Daniel entered the "settin' room." Mrs. Stockwell's greeting was a hearty one, with a general round of handshakes, and gave him her hand in homely country fashion and wished him good evening. Daniel sat on the edge of the known world.

"I'm a squire," he exclaimed, "I don't know why you come here to the winter where everybody can see as hont's got no business to, but I don't care. Everybody knows that I've been courtin' you since we went barefooted together to the red school house, an' it'll take mornin' Mis' Gamble's tongue to keep me from kissin' you as I laid ought to."

Annie started to raise her hands, but Daniel was too quick for her, and he pressed his lips to her cheek, for she had no time to move away. When he got her into a chair and looked at her over. Daniel Hardy was not an analyst. He felt her resistance; he was vaguely disturbed by it, but he could not tell what was wrong, even if anything was. He took a chair near Annie and began:

"I've been lookin' forard to this, Annie, ever sence you went to school three years ago. I made up my mind then that when you come home I would have money enough laid by to set up house-keepin'."

"Well, Daniel, don't," interrupted Annie, and she reached impulsively forward and took one of his great hands in both of hers. "Don't let us talk of it now, please."

"But I done it," he persisted; "they're money in the bank, an' I've got a chance to buy the old Ransum place, an' by a little fixin' it'll do fast till we can build a new house onto it. The site is all good's it's in the country, 'n if you liked it better, I s'pose the bank would let me have money enough to build to once. Everything's ready jest 's soon as you, 'n it shall be jest's you want it, 'n I don't perpose to hurry you neither, 'cept it's a long time I've been waitin'."

"Did you hear what you told Mis' Brown about me, Annie?"

"Yes, 'n' while I don't believe in other folks don't my courtin' for me, I kind o' felt pleased. We've known each other too long, Annie, to have no kind o' nonsense between us. Don't you think so?"

Annie was silent for a moment. Then she looked up with a smile.

"There isn't any nonsense about either of us, Daniel," she said.

"That's so!" he exclaimed, emphatically.

"I knowed you thought so."

Annie was at work on tattin', and apparently absorbed in it, for her head was bent low over her busy fingers. Daniel shifted his feet and clasped his hands behind his chair.

"Kind o' wish," he ventured, with an uneasy laugh, "that folks went to parties in summer."

"Why?" asked Annie without looking up.

"'Cause of they did we might be there an' there might be a game of forfeits, an' you and I might be told, that is I might be told to kiss you behind the door."

Annie laid down her tattin', and when she raised her head there was a wistful look in her eyes.

"There is no need of a party, Daniel," she said, "for—for you and me."

"No, there ain't," he asserted, and before his retiring nature could assert itself he had stepped across the room to her side and their lips met for the first time, undivided by any barrier.

"Daniel, I'm not to be regularly followed by this strong, awkward man?"

"I'm not to be settin' up, Mr. Sparks," responded Daniel, evasively.

"Yas," drawled Mr. Sparks; "they's several sicknesses don't confine a man to his bed, ya?"

As Daniel made no reply, the kindly postmaster continued:

"You're a younger man th'n I am, Dan'l, but you've got a good heart, an' most boys of your age 'n' you'd ought to have seen that you can't spec' too much in afeers of the heart. Hay, Daniel?"

Daniel rose from the cracker barrel on which he had been sitting.

"Mr. Sparks," she said slowly, and all the villagers listened intently: "you 'b an older man th'n I be, 'n you'd ought to have learnt to meddle with nobody's business that don't concern yours. Mebbe, though, bein' postmaster, you can't help it."

If ever a sly pleased the listeners that old Mr. Sparks was notorious, even in rustic Posket, for his persistence in learning about the correspondence that passed through his hands.

"They's no sense in gettin' excited, Dan'l Hardy," he said, "an' they's no call for you to be sassy to a man's went to school with your father. Everybody in Posket 'n' fer miles around knowed that you 's'pos' to bein' Squire Stockwell's daughter, the Lord know's how long, 'n' be's engaged to her for goin' on three, 'n' I 's'pos' you're pr'aps more; you 's'pos' to be in a good way."

The squire's rugged face was luminous with compassion. Daniel gave one glance at him, another at the darkening hills, and asked:

"Is he in there with her?"

"Yes, Dan'l, he is, but understand me, so far's I know, nothin' has 'ben said between 'em 'n' she's 's'posed to change matters. Nothin' has 'ben said to me 'cept 'bout 'fishin' an' railroad sh'ers. I haven't had no chance to speak to Annie, but if it comes to a pint, Dan'l, you 's'pos' to be in a good way."

"I 's'pos' he's 'll be in a good way," Daniel said, and down went his clinched fists into his pockets. He stood still for a moment, and none of his neighbors ventured to address him. Then he left the store without waiting for the stage and went home.

"I don't need that gossip should interfere," Daniel of the rambles concluded, and down went his clinched fists into his pockets. He stood still for a moment, and none of his neighbors ventured to address him. Then he left the store without waiting for the stage and went home.

The town council was in session last night. Deputy-Sheriff Hope was in town yesterday.

Mr. Harry Fowkes has moved into his new residence on Thomas street.

Mr. Jamison, of the Belleville Intelligencer, gave us a pleasant visit yesterday.

A business card in THE TRIBUNE will pay simply because it reaches all the people of this district.

The Belleville district meeting of the Methodist Church will be held at Shannonville on the 20th and 21st, inst.

Mr. George Field has returned from Napanee where he has been finishing the stairway of the new Collegiate Institute in that place.

The mail for England via Quebec leaves Deseronto every Wednesday night. All letters should be posted before 8 P. M. on that day.

Our Tyendinaga Reserve correspondent should be advised that THE TRIBUNE does not believe in ferry-boats. A bridge is the only correct policy.

A correspondent to the Belleville Intelligencer says that fish protection on the Trent river is all nonsense, the law being openly violated.

The Dominion Government have granted $3,200 per mile towards building the Bay of Quinte & Lake Nipissing Railway from Belleville to Bridgewater.

Capt. John Staurt has been engaged in putting Mr. T. Nasmyth's boat into shape for the summer. The boat is to be one of the best equipped boats on the bay.

There are seven males and one female prisoner, now confined in the county gaol. This is the smallest number of prisoners that has been in the gaol for several years. There is only one lunatic.

Messrs. T. Butler and E. Wilson were out in Kennebec last week and paid out over three thousand dollars to various lumber-jobs for the Rathbun Company.

Mr. F. A. Halliday, of Palmerston, is the Reform candidate in Addington. Mr. Reid, the Conservative candidate, Mr. Miller, Independent, may yet retire from the contest.

Keep your eye each week on the Belleville business house column which is steadily growing. All the leading and responsible houses of Belleville will soon be represented therein.

The age of minors who are forbidden to have liquor under the license act has been raised from sixteen to eighteen years. This portion of the act is openly violated by many vendors.

Mr. Wm. Dawes, writing from New York to a friend in Deseronto, states that his brother Mr. George Dawes, of Brantford, has completely lost his eyesight as the result of a gripe.

Owing to the cold weather and the ground being wet a great number of farmers are behind with their sowing operations and a great quantity of grain is yet to be put in the ground.

On Wednesday, 14th inst., George, aged 12 years, son of Principal Grant of Queen's College, died from typhoid fever. The parents have general sympathy in their extreme affliction.

Next Tuesday is the anniversary of the death of Christopher Columbus and Wednesday is the forty-third anniversary of the proclamation of the confederation of the British North American provinces.

We direct attention to the advertisement of the Glasgow Warehouse, Belleville. This is one of the leading houses of the Bay district, Mr. J. W. Dunnett, its proprietor, being one of the solid men of the City of the Bay.

There has been a general compliance with the demand of the board of health in reference to the removal of all filth and garbage. There are a few laggards, however, whom the inspector will prosecute for their refusal to comply.

Here is a pointer for Chief Guyon: It is stated that there is a collector in Peel county who has a large number of houses to let for a dollar a week. This brings a reply from every dog, which the family may have concealed to avoid taxation. Great scheme, that.

The Canadian Lumberman has removed from Peterboro to Toronto and will hereafter be published from the latter city. This interesting journal is fully meeting the wants of the class it caters to, and is doing a most creditable work in propagating its usefulness.

When you come to run for office you will discover that not a few persons to whom you have at some time rendered special favors will oppose you the hardest. Politics develop the manhood of all men. The ingrate bawls up so naturally as a foster on a fish-line.

Mr. George Stewart has again resumed his position as a reporter for the synod of the Presbyterian church at Orillia.

An interesting conference in which various subjects were discussed, was held on Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Rev. S. Young, the retiring Moderator, preaching a able sermon. Rev. J. Abraham, of Whitby, was elected Moderator for the ensuing year.

The Synod then proceeded with regular order.

Other matters, the outcome from the synod of Kingstion favoring the formation of a Presbytery of Belleville was remitted with a recommendation to the General Assembly.

The ladies of the Presbyterian congregation of Orillia received the delegates to the Synod at a special meeting.

Mr. Thompson, a resident of Orillia, placed his steamer at the disposal of members of Synod for a sail to Lake Couchiching, and all the people of the pretty town were unwearied in their hospitality and attention to the visitors.

Mr. Russell, the young representative of an encouraging character, Rev. J. Craig was appointed a member of the standing committee, and Mr. Russell, a member of the committee on systematic beneficence.

The next meeting of this synod will be held on the second Tuesday of May next at Lindsay.

Feast of Days.

The feature of "The Feast of Days" which has for some time been pleasantly anticipated by all classes of the community will be held in Union Hall, on Wednesday and Thursday next 21st, and 22nd inst.

The society of Stead, Gleason, the Prayson, and the like, whose names are to be mentioned, have been busy for some time making preparation for the event, and it promises to be one of the most pleasant festivals ever held in Deseronto.

There will be a series of booths and attractions, each representing a particular day of the week as follows:

Monday—washing day; Tuesday—ironing day; Wednesday—mending day; Thursday—cooking day; Friday—fishing day;

Saturday—baking day; Sunday—rest day.

The fair of fair young ladies will offer for sale

a large stock of fancy and useful articles suitable for use on each of these days, thus affording every opportunity for the indulgence of pleasure.

The festival will commence at 2 p. m. on both Wednesday and Thursday.

CHAPTER V.
THE DOCTOR'S TREATMENT.

"My brave little girl—my darling—my Katie!"

After that I was very ill. The company left me, and Dr. Katesby came every day. He asked if there was any one belonging to me for whom he could send.

"Only Uncle Job," said I. "He hates me because I went on the stage, but if the curtain is going to ring down on me it would only be showing him proper attention to inform him."

I gave my cross old uncle's address. Behold! Uncle Job sent back a check for $5,000, and a letter telling the doctor not to let me die. "She is a silly child," he wrote, "but her heart is in the right place, except for being set on the stage."

I wept over that letter, and thought it rather nice to die.

One day Dr. Katesby brought his mother, and the next thing I knew I was taken to their home to "get well." I got well so slowly that I wondered the doctor did not lose patience. But he didn't. One afternoon he sat by me a long while, telling me of a girl who had jilted him, and who, he thought, had broken his heart forever. I sat up straight in bed and vowed that of all things love was the unkindest, most unsatisfactory, cruellest, worst in the world. We talked a long time, and he seemed to think as I did. In the end we shook hands and he said: "We will be friends, Miss Katie, forever."

"Yes," said I, shaking his hand in both of mine, "and I'm awfully grateful to you. Friendship is so nice, and I do want it!" Of a sudden I determined to secure matters, and I looked at him as solemnly as I knew how, and said: "Promise me sorely that you will never talk to me any way but this way, never look at me except as you are looking now, and never, never kiss me. He shook hands again, and I went on: "We will be just friends always."

"As long as you like," said he.

"Oh, I shall like it always," I answered. "I never go back on a friend. Friendship is the best thing in the world—the only safe, happy, comfortable thing—isn't it? And we should be very grateful for the happy friendship between us."

He said "yes," and so it was settled.

I got well. I was perfectly happy.

The doctor was always good to me. He was so too, though he never came to his office. He even let me pound pills, wash out bottles and dust his instruments. Sometimes, when Mrs. Katesby was tired, I used to see to his breakfast, and even when he discovered that I made the toast I was not forbidden. It seemed to me that no one had ever been so kind to me.

At last I was well enough to go to New York for my May engagements. The evening before I was to start I sat up for the doctor. Mrs. Katesby had kissed me and told me to. I went wandering about, touching things that belonged to him. I had a queer feeling in my heart. I had been so happy, and now to go away and perhaps never—never heard his key and ran to open the door.

"What, little girl—up?" said he.

"Yes," I answered; "your mother told me to serve you your midnight tea. I don't think you should have midnight tea, but I suppose a doctor knows."

"I suppose so," said he, as I helped him take off his coat.

"He was so quiet at the table that he asked: 'Anything the matter?'

"Only—I'm going to-morrow, you know," I murmured, "and you wouldn't believe how strange it makes me feel here," and I rubbed my hand over the pain in my side.

"Your heart?" he asked.

"Yes—dreadfully miserable," I answered.

He laughed only softly, but I felt hurt, and all of a sudden I could not see. He must have observed that I was pouring tea into the sugar bowl, for he called me to him. I thought it troubled him to look up. So I knelt down.

"When you go away," he asked, "will you remember we are friends?"

"Yes," said I.

"Forever?" he asked again, in a dull voice.

"Tell me, Katie!" he continued, laying a hand on each of my shoulders.

"I've treated you as you wished—as I promised?" I nodded, and the tears came up. He looked at me a moment, then said softly: "Friendship is the best thing in the world, the only safe, happy, comfortable thing, isn't it, dear? and we should be very grateful for the happy friendship between us."

I nodded so hard that the tears spattered my hands. He stood up quickly. "I am off early to-morrow," and I will say good-by now. He good in New York. I shall come about the 15th to see you."

He held out his hand. It was just what a friend would do, of course. I put first one hand and then the other into it. Then, as he closed his over both

I bent and kissed it and said: "Good-by. You have been very good to me. Please, please don't forget me."

When I got upstairs I lay down on the floor and wept till my head was in a puddle.

Mrs. Katesby wrote to me sometimes after I came away. She was so lonely that she sent for a nurse. The doctor liked his cousin very much. I thought about the cousin all day and all night. At last the 14th of the month came. That night I played so well the manager offered a rise for the next season. The last was Sunday. He came. I talked like a magpie and spoke of everything but the cousin. When I was talked out he began. He questioned me closely about the theatre.

"Oh, yes," said I. "there is a man, of course. He told me last night he was going to shoot himself. I said no, he wouldn't—to just take a brandy and soda."

The doctor looked dark. "I will not have you associate with such people," he said, "not even their teeth."

"What's to be done?" I returned, lightly adding: "Hadocin' both me and loans over the table to say in a hasty whisper that he loves me. How men will do such things at luncheons! It's so annoying when one is hungry. You can't go on brutally eating partridge while a man tells you he has despair in his heart and a loaded pistol in his pocket—can you?"

The doctor was not amused. "Do you care for any of these fellows?" he asked suddenly.

"For my life I could not tell the truth. I don't know," I answered sulkily. Then all at once I cried: "Do you care for your cousin?"

"Very much," he answered, absently.

Then he asked in a strained way if I thought we could still be friends if either of us married, and in the next breath, informed me that he was going to Europe. My heart had been filling up tighter and tighter. Then all at once I cried: "Do you care for your cousin?"

"Are you going to leave me?" I said.

"Katie," he answered, feeling his way through the words, "there is nothing else for me to do."

"Don't you care for me at all that you break my heart so?" I cried, pushing my hands hard together; "am I the side of the house that you look at me?"

Then I said: "I see how cruel you are to people for now my heart breaks when I look at you. It is right I should have to say it so—and for nothing—for I have always been cruel, and believed no one—but now I know it can be true. Though my heart breaks I am not afraid, and I say it again—I love you—I love myself."

"Katie," he said steadily, "remember that I have you spelled out to make."

A great light flashed before my eyes. I stood up and reached out my hands. "Oh!" I said. "I see how cruel I have been to people for now my heart breaks. You may hurt me as much as you like. I am no coward. Still I will tell you. I know I made you promise to be my friend and never to love me—I know it and you have kept your word. You are going to marry your cousin and go to Europe; but before you go I will tell you that I love you. It is right I should have to say it so—and for nothing—for I have always been cruel, and believed no one—but now I know it can be true. Though my heart breaks I am not afraid, and I say it again—I love you—I love myself."

"Katie," he said steadily, "remember that I have you spelled out to make."

A great light flashed before my eyes. I stood up and reached out my hands. "Oh!" I said. "I see how cruel I have been to people for now my heart breaks. You may hurt me as much as you like. I am no coward. Still I will tell you. I know I made you promise to be my friend and never to love me—I know it and you have kept your word. You are going to marry your cousin and go to Europe; but before you go I will tell you that I love you. It is right I should have to say it so—and for nothing—for I have always been cruel, and believed no one—but now I know it can be true. Though my heart breaks I am not afraid, and I say it again—I love you—I love myself."

BANKRUPT STOCK SALE!

TYENDINAGA RESERVE

From Our Own Correspondent.

Dr. Oronhyatekha returned on Sunday morning from an extended trip of two months to Vancouver and the north-west and points in the United States on Forester business. At Vancouver the Dr. met with the Rev. Mr. Ebbs, a Congregational Divine from England, who was staying on board the pleasure canoe of the "Pine" where he enjoyed its well known hospitality. The Union Jack floated from the Pines during the Dr. presence on the Reserve.

Miss Lydia, who left on the 8th last, for the north-west, returned on the 11th, at the Sault where she was hospitably received by Mrs. Wilson of the Shingwauk Home.

She was much pleased with the school and its surroundings, particularly with the Bishop of Almonte, who she had great pleasure.

A Shingwauk, Down town, belonging to Joseph Picard, gave birth to a lamb which had but one eye and that in the centre of its forehead. Had this modern cyclope lived, it would have been valuable to the renowned Barnum.

We regret to learn of the serious illness of John W. Martin who has for some time been a tenant of the Reserve.

Our people who had been earning money by working on the Reserve, are returning their labours on Tuesday of last week.

We regret to announce the death on Tuesday, the 15th inst., of Amelia May, only child of Willie Green, aged two years and four months. She was buried on Friday morning in Christ Church Cemetery.

The Reverend Mr. Anderson went to Trosset on Friday afternoon to attend a confirmation held in St. George's church that evening. There were several of the clergy of the Diocese present.

Mr. H. H. Webster has returned from a long visit to London and other points west. He has kindly taken charge of the organ at All Saints church during the absence of Miss Lydia Hill.

The Tribune bridged over our query last week as to the firm on which subject the Dr. is much interested and whilst we agree that a bridge must eventually connect us with Prince Edward, in the meantime it appears to us that a ferry man from that county should trespass upon the Reserve. Were the boat on the other leg there would be a lawsuit. What did the Arbitra tors do at a fair way always at?

DEMARESTVILLE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

A party from Naperville recently set some traps near "Bearcat" Lake. After having some of his nets stolen, and not having any license to use them in those waters, he decided to return home.

H. R. Purcell, Overseer of Fisheries, was here the other day.

The bullet train is running now and Mr. Timothy Caulfield is a gang of men in the 19th.

What has become of that morning train, going north, on the K.N. & W.R.? The way the trains are running now passengers cannot get a fairer north than Yarker and return sans day.

Mr. Palmerett has erected a new shed and ball room in connection with "Lake View" hotel.

The Phelan House narrowly escaped being destroyed by fire last week.

Mr. G. C. Glick goes to Flinton.

Mr. George Flynn died on the 16th after a few days illness of inflammation.

Mr. Wm. Robinson and Mr. Alex. Howe, of Camden East, spent Sunday here visiting friends.

Mr. Dan Hamilton, of Camden East, has been visiting the Misses McKiernan.

Mr. John Bohan, of Tweed, is cheese-maker in Bakers' factory.

Mr. James Waterbury, of Deseronto, is engaged in carpenter work on the station.

Mr. John Wallace, of Naperville, is plastering the station.

Mr. John Weir, of Belleville, spent a few days in the village.

William and Daniel McKeown are both very low with consumption.

Mr. James Armstrong is very low with consumption.

The Dominion Express Company have opened an office here.

SHANNONVILLE

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mr. John Peake is visiting friends in Illelock, Mr. Howitt, of Chicago, is the guest of Mr. Williams.

It was Miss Tena Earle, of Roolin, who was visiting in our village and not Miss Lenn, as was stated in last week's issue.

Service will be held in the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening the summer one Sunday in the afternoon, and every alternate Sunday in the evening.

Commissioner Marrigan is grading north Mill street.

Rev. A. Young conducted the services in the Presbyterian church last Sunday forenoon, Rev. Mr. Craig taking Mr. Young's pulpit in Napane.

The boardwalk and street in front of too many business places in town present a disorderly appearance on Sunday by a neglect to remove all rubbish on Saturday evening.

As there were not sufficient members present to constitute a quorum, no meeting of the congregation was held last week, but the town appears to get along just as well with out a council as with it.

On the recommendation of Mr. J. B. Reid, architect, the terra cotta fire proofing material manufactured by the Rathbun Company will be used in the erection of the new hospital at Kingston.

The Independent states that a petition was presented to the congregation of the church upon which Peter Davis is in circulation in Belleville and a large number of signatures were obtained.

A fire would have been an improvement in some of the churches last Sunday. The fire was a good one, but the victims of it's gripes have yet passed growing over the cold reception they experienced.

We have received from the Belleville Business College, Belleville, a copy of a very neat circular giving information concerning the complete and comprehensive commercial training imparted in that successfully managed institution.

Several dangerous holes have been made in the boardwalks this season by carpers hauling heavy loads into yards. If these boards or planks were laid down before they attempt this a saving to the property would be effected.

The members of Deseronto Court, Independent Order of Foresters, contemplate holding a great picnic and demonstration upon Dominion Day of this year. Members of the different courts in the district will be asked to participate.

The Elle Ross ran against a log on Monday morning, and one of the buckets of her wheel was broken and had to be saved out before she could proceed on her way. The Hero also struck a log on Saturday night about the same place.

Mr. Robt. Pearson left on Monday for Toronto to assist in making some changes in the Independent which he recently acquired by the Rathbun Company. The work will be done under the supervision of Mr. Wm. Mitchell of Deseronto.

Capt. John Gale, of Gananoque, spent a few days in town this week and assisted Capt. Cardiff at successful meetings in the Salvation Army barracks.

The Captain is the hero of the Elle Ross and was especially greeted by a host of his old friends in Deseronto.

Messrs. Preston and Morden of the Napanee Collegiate Institute visited the new high school building on Wednesday and took notes of the interior in which the grounds are laid out. They considered the room beautiful and will probably adopt a similar plan in Napane.

The Boundary Road—most unfortunate of all roads in this province—has been selected by the great mass of the community as the dumping ground for all refuse from back yards, etc. Some parties, as to whom their utter disregard of the health and municipal authorities, whether provincial, town, or township, have dumped night soil within fifteen feet of the Napanee road. Cleanliness is unnecessary.

Mr. Grontschawski favored us with a pleasant call on Monday. He had just returned home from his visit to California and other parts of the Pacific Coast, where he made a great success in his efforts to forward the cause of the Independent Order of Foresters. He was accompanied by Rev. Mr. Ebs, a Congregational clergyman of Gravesend, England, who is enjoying a visit to "The Queen's." Mr. Ebs is about a fourth of the way down the coast and is now returning by the G. P. R. route.

THE JESSIE BRECK CAPSIZED.

Kington, May 18.—About one o'clock Saturday afternoon a schooner was noticed about four miles from Kington. Miss was seen to roll over into the rough sea. The Jessie Breck, loaded with timber, was the only boat here. It was thought she was the unfortunate vessel. Capt. Booth, the owner, immediately set to work to get to the rescue, but it was impossible to get a tug to assist.

About 4 o'clock the steamer Hiram Calvin came from Gananoque and soon met up with the wrecks. The boat four miles from Nine Mile Point the vessel could be seen on her broadside, and her name could be made out on her broadside. The Jessie Breck, loaded with timber, was the only boat here. It was thought she was the unfortunate vessel to be lost.

TRUE STORY OF A WALL STREET HERO
BY HENRY CLEWS.

CHAPTER III.

MR. WELLMAN'S PERI.

Each hand held a fragment of the tree. For once Daniel, Hardy's small stock of wisdom served him well for the purposes of prophecy. Theodore Wellman roamed about the Posket forests for the definite announcement was made that he and Annie Stockwell were to be married. One day Daniel was busy extricating logs from the snarls and jams in the mill stream a half mile above the mill, when he came upon Wellman, his rod and hook thrown aside, reclining idly in the shade and watching the picture scene.

For a moment Daniel stood back of his rival, struggling with a tremendous impulse to throw him over the cliff.

Was it caution that restrained the brute within him? Did the human element in his nature shrink from murder unfairly done? Did it seem cowardly to take an enemy unawares?

A log that Daniel had not started forward to hurl him over the waterfall. He had reached for the branch of a tree just above his head, and had wrenched it from the trunk. Holding it out at arm's length he twisted the green fiber until the bark wrinkled and peeled, and each hand held a fragrant of the limb. Both these he threw down at his rival's feet.

"Darn you, Mr. Wellman," he hissed. "Take the stink out of the forest."

He strode away into the forest, then stopped after a few steps and turned around. He gazed down at the broken limb, which seemed to quiver in each part from Daniel's touch, and up at the tree from which it had been torn, and down at the black, rock flooded pool below the falls. His face had not lost its pallor, and as he picked up his fishing rod his hand trembled violently, and his step was unsteady, as he slowly took up his march to the village tavern.

Annie Stockwell was married in the October succeeding her engagement to Mr. Wellman. It is still related in Posket that Daniel Hardy was invited into pools of the world's wisdom by the Professors of medicine, knowledge and experience. He accepted some of the invitations and refused others. From the well known character of the men with whom he associated I wonder how he escaped ruin more than once. His conservatism never deserted him, and beneath his uncouth exterior was a tenacious intellect, wonderfully sharpened by contact with the world.

Now all through these years he had been studying one thing more than all else: Theodore Wellman's habits. He learned what the banker's favorite stocks for speculation were, through whom he dealt, and many details unnecessary to repeat here. At last came the famous "Shawnee railroad deal." The cost of the stock of this road amounted to $10,000,000, but it ruled in the market at about $50.

It was one of the "fancies" in which Mr. Wellman delighted to speculate. A selling movement began in this stock one day, and it proceeded from Wellman's house. The price had gone down a full point, when an obscure broker on the floor of the exchange began to take every block of it that was offered. The decline ceased and a contrary movement set in. Still this obscure broker bought. Everybody began to rush for his Shawnee and offer it to this broker, and pretty soon the question ran from mouth to mouth:

"Who is this Brown represent?" Naldo would reply. "I went the price of Shawnee and at the close of day's proceedings it was quoted at $6. The next day the movement continued and leading among the sellers was Mr. Theodore Wellman's broker. Every effort was made to break the mysterious purchaser, but without avail, and at the end of trading Shawnee was at $13, with a record of three thousand more shares sold than were in existence. On the third day the effort to break the purchaser ended in offering to him a lot of stock sent from a distant city by special train. Every share was taken.

It was a grand success. The bear was in. It got him up to $15. The next day he was in again. They had to get $16. The bear with which to fill their engagements to deliver. The obscure broker was ready to do it, but he wanted something like $300 for his share. It meant ruin to many, and there were several speedy suspensions. Among them was the house of Theodore Wellman.

Soon after the announcement a messenger brought word to him that if he would call at Brown's office a proposition for a settlement would be laid before him. He went over at once and found others of his ruined associates on the same stand, but he alone was admitted to a back room. There sat Daniel Hardy, son of an old, but there was no expression of cold satisfaction in his eyes.

"Don't you think," he began, "for you know, I cannot see it. You must know that a woman's affections are not to be forced; you cannot hope to turn them into the channel you desire, and if she freely gives her heart to another, you cannot reasonably complain. It's hard, I admit; I think I know how you feel, for not so long ago Miss Stockwell rejected me."

"You tell me a darn sight more," retorted Mr. Wellman, "replied Daniel. Mr. Wellman at once became very serious.

"I am sorry you think so," he began, "for you know, I cannot see it. You must know that a woman's affections are not to be forced; you cannot hope to turn them into the channel you desire, and if she freely gives her heart to another, you cannot reasonably complain. It's hard, I admit; I think I know how you feel, for not so long ago Miss Stockwell rejected me."

"Don't you think," interrupted Daniel, "that her name might's well be left out of this argument?"

"As you please, Mr. Hardy, but you see if it was not for her we should not be talking in this way."

"No, sir!" exclaimed Daniel, "not by a thundering sight! Taint her as he brought you an' me to argyfyn' but her, Mr. Wellman."

Mr. Wellman bit his lips and half regretted that he had attempted to reason with this boorish fellow.

"Well," he said, "suppose I am, let that pass. What I wanted to show you is a reasonable, fair minded man, that the lady in question is naturally fitted for a different kind of life than that she would lead if she settled down in Posket. You know that she has become a brilliant, educated lady, and it is perfectly natural that a man in the class to which she has raised herself should be more attractive to her than—ah—well, frankly, than a honest but uneducated man. I don't want to be offensive, but you must see what I mean."

There was a momentary confusion in Daniel's mind as he sat, rather than thought, that a girl who was born in Posket should find Posket good enough to live in, as had her own mother; and that a Posket boy whom she had encouraged to love her should be good enough to live with, but out of the bitter torture of his thoughts this came:

"You're a settin' yourself up, Mr. Wellman, to be a better man than I be. Well, I'm not disputin' but what you may be; but a pos' is what you was born to. I run a grocery store, and I run a hotel, and I run a barbershop, and my pictures hang up. I have to understand stocks dealing without operating, and he also came to know some of the faces that are rarely seen in the street. They are those of men who live at their ease, but watch the market, and now and then swoop down upon it, buy a lot of stock for cash, sell perhaps a few days, and then retire and wait for another season of depression. Wellman watched such men and learned a lesson.

"Oh, well, if you can't look at this uncomfortable matter as a reasonable man should, you ought to take a business view of it. The young lady's affections were in the market. You made your bid, but I just happened to get a corner on you, and you ought to be content to stand your losses."

Then he removed his inspection of the noisy cascade, smiling a little at his own cleverness in bringing a painful conversation so brilliant and conclusive a close. The tumbling water made a deal of fuss in going over the cliff; it foamed and boiled, and shouted to the trees to see it pound the rocks in the pool below it, impalpable powder, but above its noisy roar Mr. Wellman, stretched at full length at the very edge of the descent, heard a sound that turned him that one should follow Daniel Hardy. The difficulty was to discover what Daniel was doing. He was close as an oyster, and his operations were by no means confined to the office where he spent most of his time. Nevertheless, though he was regarded as a shrewd and successful man, nobody ever dreamed that he would become a dominant factor in that street.

Occasionally he met Mr. Wellman, then at the head of a banking house of some importance. The banker said to him:

"I am glad to hear that you are getting on well, Mr. Hardy. If I can be of any assistance to you in the way of information, or otherwise, let me know."

"Thankie, Mr. Wellman," responded Daniel, gravely, "I may call on you some day."

The time came, after several years, that Daniel Hardy was invited into pools of the world's wisdom by the Professors of medicine, knowledge and experience. He accepted some of the invitations and refused others. From the well known character of the men with whom he associated I wonder how he escaped ruin more than once. "Well," he said, "suppose I am, let that pass. What I wanted to show you is a reasonable, fair minded man, that the lady in question is naturally fitted for a different kind of life than that she would lead if she settled down in Posket. You know that she has become a brilliant, educated lady, and it is perfectly natural that a man in the class to which she has raised herself should be more attractive to her than—ah—well, frankly, than a honest but uneducated man. I don't want to be offensive, but you must see what I mean."

There was a momentary confusion in Daniel's mind as he sat, rather than thought, that a girl who was born in Posket should find Posket good enough to live in, as had her own mother; and that a Posket boy whom she had encouraged to love her should be good enough

Read this extract from the scientific papers of Great Britain and Europe:

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions and hospitals of medical knowledge and experience. The following is a brief sketch of the Hospital Remedy for Catarrh. It has been secured the prescriptions of the best hospitals, prepared especially for the public, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle.

Startled, the broken speculator raised his head. Hardy stood up, and looked down at him for a full minute. Then he said slowly:

"I've been lookin' for'ard to this a long time, an' now you've got to settle, an' you can't, you can't do it."

"For God's sake, Daniel Hardy," cried Wellman, "do not continue this useless cruelty. I am in your power. You have ruined me; it will take much more than I possess to make up for this. But name your figure, and let me pay it. I could have thrown you over the falls at Posket. That I've cornered you, I could have. I've licked you at your own game."

Wellman was completely broken by the sudden blow, and lay dead, left him, fawning, begging, and crying in abject misery. Then other ruined men were admitted, and a settlement was made with them, and the new broker was to be the one to whom they had to do in return. Some of the unfortunate had not yet recovered. Wellman's apparent failure was the worst of all, but to everybody's surprise he secured credit when he enabled him to slowly pay his debts.

The fact is that Daniel Hardy, having given himself with remorse, felt some of the sharp reculsion of feeling as his hard nature would admit; and within twenty-four hours of the scene in Brown's office, he had secured a good deal of the credit that he had lost.

The Shawnee deal was his first great success, and his last of any kind in Wall Street.

Except in cases of severe colds is one of the faces. The man and the woman, the here and the here, still live. Many men in Wall street today will recognize them, even under the filth mud I have given them to identify.

TAKE END.

LOCAL ITEMS.

To-morrow is the Queen's Birth Day. Mr. H. B. Rathbun has imported some Magnum potatoes direct from Scotland. The Bay presented a stormy appearance last Saturday, the waves dashing over the steamboat dock.

Where are those iron nuts for the machine gun? was a question which caused an agitation on Monday.

The Dominion parliament was prorogued on Friday, the session having been one of the longest in history.

The Belleville Ontario has donned a new dress of type and comes to us greatly improved in appearance.

"The most welcome visitor of the week" is a subscriber writing from Cleveland, Ohio, styles The Tribune.

Mr. James H. Hopper, of Huntington, has announced himself as a candidate to oppose Mr. Wood in North Hastings.

The Citizens' Band gave an open air concert last Friday evening, their selections being listened to by large crowds of citizens.

Mr. Meredith will not speak at Belleville during the present campaign, his engagements being too numerous in other parts of the province.

Three citizens met causally at the dock on Monday afternoon. They tipped the warehouse scales with an average weight of 210, the heaviest weighing 225 lbs.

On Saturday of last week the bundle of Toronto World failed to appear. The postal inspector will draw his salary over without fulfilling regularity.

Recent changes made by Mr. Fidgen on the grand jury in the Central Office are a pronounced improvement. He has now commenced work on Dexter Park.

Valuable dogs owned by Messrs. James Stokes and T. Caughey died from the effects of poison administered by some fiend who will yet find himself in the meshes of the law.

The East Hastings license commissioners met at Belleville, on the 15th inst., and appointed John Canniff of Cawton, chairman to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. George Phillips.

Mr. A. C. Colburn, has been drawing in front of the Royal and Hastings of mammals proportions for the new street crossings which the street committee are laying down in various parts of the town.

The Canada Lumberman is now published in Toronto, where it has secured quarters at 20 Yonge street, Arcade. This enterprising journal has met with great success and must continue to deserve an ever increasing patronage.

Mr. Patrick Fox, of Bay View Ranch, was driving along, 1,200 ft. of bay, to the Big Stables in town, when he reached the corner of Dundas and Centre streets to a whole load upset, almost filling Mr. E. Wilson's yard.

Mr. Robt. H. McKee, formerly of the Deseronto Cedar Mill and lately of Arnprior, is now manager of the Setauna Lumber Company, at Estero, Florida. We congratulate him on his appointment to such a responsible position.

The Bishop of Ontario will conduct ordination services in Christ Church, Belleville, on June 15th. A number of priests and deacons will be ordained. Mr. A. B. Wherry, formerly of the Reformed Episcopal Church, Belleville, will be amongst those to be admitted to the ministry.

Mr. Robert Geddes arrived home on the 25th last Sunday morning after a visit of over two weeks among friends in Oswego and Rochester. He found large colonies of feral Deserotonians in both cities, all of whom were prospering. Mr. Geddes was a resident of Belgrave about eight years ago. He finds wonderful changes in that handsome city since that time. There is every evidence of growth and substantial progress.

There is too little attention paid to the law respecting black knot on fruit trees. Wherever affliction of this kind is found in the garden or in the orchard, it should be promptly and properly treated, either in the early stages or the knots are little exists, or the destruction of the fruit is almost impossible. It is to the interest of every person having fruit trees as well as to the welfare of his neighbor's trees to cut out the knots.

The World of Vancouver, B. C. states that W. C. Archer left on the 1st inst. for the Promont on an extended trip to England. After a glance at Seattle, he will go on to Victoria, then back to Seattle whence he will go to (I ignore) New York via New York. He will visit several points of interest in Great Britain and on the continent before returning. Mrs. Archer's son, A. J. Danner, will return with Mr. Archer's partner, A. J. Danner, will manage the business during his absence.

Still Another Galaxy of Bargains at CHEAPSIDE.

Cold, rainy, backward weather, isn't it? and it all has its effect on trade. When it is warm, we are more than busy, and people are showing a warm appreciation of the bargains we advertised last week, and when it is cold we are looking up bargains for warm weather. It's a cold day when we can't see a bargain, and it's a colder day when we don't secure it. We just bought a lot of Silks at

45 CENTS ON THE $

because the quality was too good to sell at the price. They are the best colored Silks ever brought to Canada. PURE SILK from Stem to Stern, from Front to Back, from Top to Bottom, from End to End, five patterns in one quality, worth $2.25 a yard for 85 cents; one elegant $4 plaid pattern to be sold at $1.35. ONE BARGAIN but whets our appetite for more, and we cleared another lot of beautiful, fine quality, wide Ginghams, worth 15 cents anywhere in this country, all the stores sell them at 15 cents, and what do you suppose we will sell them at? 81 CENTS, A YARD; and if we could get type big enough we would put this $1 as big as the side of a barn, and then it wouldn't be as big as the bargain it represents.

ANOTHER BARGAIN

is the purchase of a lot of SILK WARPS and all-wool Henriettes; these are beautiful quality, good black, and a frugal bargain, we will sell them at less than the regular wholesale prices, as we bought them at 70 cents on the dollar. We will sell a $2 Silk Wrap Henrietta for $1.25 and the $1.35 quality for 90 cents. If these are not a bargain, there never has been one since the sun shone. STILL ANOTHER bargain is a purchase of Shirting of the very best that can be made, and we can sell the 15 ct. goods for 12 cents, 12¢ cent quality for 10¢, and the 10¢ quality for 5¢ a yard.

3 CENTS A YARD SAVED

in Shirting "is not to be sneezed at" these hard times, nor is 5 cents a yard on Ducks and Cottontails, nor 2 or 3 cents a yard on Factory Cottons and Steam Looms, and that is just what we are doing every day. A lot of purchases made lately just in the nick of time, that enables us to do that, and yet make a small profit, and we are content with that, if we sell a large quantity. Do you know that we are selling Cream Lace Curtains which we bought from the manufacturer in Glasgow, Scotland, at from 75¢ to $2 a pair less than you can buy the same quality for anywhere else?

DO YOU KNOW that we have the largest stock of Prints, Sateens, Cretonnes, Muslin, etc., in the Central District and at the lowest prices. Do you know that we can save from three to ten cents a yard on every dress you buy at Cheapside. We are selling a good dress Goods for 5 cents a yard.

IT IS A FACT our first import of Gloves and Hose are nearly all sold, and we have just assorted the stock all fresh at reduced prices. 3 pairs hose for 25¢, 2 pairs heavy quality for 25¢. There is no such range of Embroideries nor any such value anywhere else as at Cheapside. "Put it down on paper and pin it to your hat, or paste it to your mirror." That Cheapside is the place to do your trading this season.

THE EIGHT STAGES.

Only a baby.
Killed and carried,
Gently held to a mother's breast.
Only a child.
Teaching alone,
brightening now its happy home.
Only a boy.
Longing to be school,
Governed now by a stern rule.
Only a youth.
Losing in dreams
Full of promise its new scene.
Only a man.
Fighting with life,
Shares in honor by a loving wife.
Only a husband.
Endured with care,
Silver threads in dark brown hair.
Only a graybeard.
Todling again,
Grown old and full of pain.
Only a mom.
Evergreen with grace
Domes unmeasured, root at rest

MY STRANGE PASSENGER.

We were on our way from Hong Kong to Foochow on the coasting steamer Nansen, writing to the Wilkinson U. S. N. in The Washington Evening Star, when Capt. Nansen (alias Achates) of the voyage, loaded at the gathering, wrote to the steward and remarked: "I hope it won't rain before we get into Amoy; we are just thirty miles away." "How do you know it won't rain?"

"Look at that rock, and over beyond it you can see through a rift in the clouds a little speck like a pin point on the top of that black mountain. The pin point is a tall pagoda on the mountain, and the rock is a tall rock. I have heard for this town as if that black rock could paint in white letters a mile high and half a mile wide—A-M-O-Y. I never see either the pagoda or the city that a cold child does not run over me."

"Will you tell me why, captain?"

"Certainly, but it's a long story: 'well, here goes."

Amoy was one of the first treaty ports in China open to foreign commerce, and for a long time the noted hatred of the Chinese for foreigners was manifested in the most violent way. I was then captain of a steamer on the first line plying between Amoy and the English colony of Hong Kong, some two hundred miles away.

One day early evening in November I went ashore in Amoy to make a few final preparations for my ship's departure the next day. While on shore I noticed that my footprints were dogged by a disreputable looking coolie, who approached me with great earnestness, and I in my mind as well as in my heart, I resolved a company opposite when the growing darkness shut out the teeming hordes of a Chinese city. I saw that it would be impossible to avoid an encounter if this strange fellow should prove to be a highwayman.

So I stopped, and my coolie, my lip pocket, when I felt it in my pocket, and my revolver, I waited for the man to come to me. I then saw that the coolie was in great distress, and moved by his earnestness, I stopped to listen to his tale. The man explained, that he had a brother who was lost at sea, and two days more for capturing him and drowning his passenger, a mandarin's son. The mandarin, bent on revenge, had thrown the boatman into prison, where the latter of course was ill-treated, and his life in imminent danger, and forced to die. The coolie said that his family were all wretchedly poor, but that they had managed, by the sale of most of their belongings, to raise money enough to bring their son to allow the prisoner to escape, and all save his life. I gave him my life to get him away on some vessel to the nearest foreign colony. The poor creature fell on his knees and implored me to save his brother's life.

He would give me anything—everything he had—just to give the hardened creature a hiding place, to save a fellow being from the hands of the man's ax! As this was muttered between broken sobs, and the poor man wept as if he were himself who was only to see two more suns rise before the earth would drink up his life blood.

I for a moment was intensely astounded, and yet I knew the treacherous nature of the Chinese and the danger in interfering with their ideas of justice, and, wishing either to test the truth of his story, or to prevail upon the coolie to tell me more, I said to him, "If your brother's escape, I said, 'I'll see him saved, and carry him down as Hong Kong for five hundred taels' about five hundred and fifty dollars, thinking that such a price would be sufficient to satisfy his master. The poor man seemed staggered at the size of the sum, a large fortune to one of his class, but he rallied in a moment, and said he supposed he would have to pay it, that it was a fearful sum, that he was very poor, and to raise so much money his family would have to sell all they owned, but he must save his brother's life; if the captain insisted he would have to pay it."

My sympathies were now still more keenly aroused, and seeing that the unwise passenger was in imminent danger, I resolved to break my word to my master, and to do all in my power to avert his misfortune. I said, "Well, I'll do for the regular fare about ten dollars; bring him down to the wharf at 11:30; I am going off to my ship."

The coolie was still more overpowered with joy, and was still "low-towing" his thanks as I moved away and he disappeared in the darkness.

It had so soon reached the wharf, about 11:45 p.m., than I was told, that the poor coolie, who now offered him self as "servant," followed me to the boat, and there saw another man as poorly clad as his brother. When we shoved off I noticed both were very shabby with their bare, but as my ship was close to the wharf we were soon alongside.

He had handed my oar-coast to the boatman and he picked up a bundle tied Chinese fash on in a large bundle, and we went on board. I said, "I'll take you to my cabin in the boat, I sent a steward forward to my cabin that would return it for a few moments, and then I saw the coolie deposit his bundle in a small closet in the cabin and told him that mine is my brother's hiding place, and that he must be seen, and that he must be quick to get into it."

At a motion over his head, the condemned man sprang off the boat, which he had taken to the gunwale, and slid noiselessly through the cabin and into the closet. I turned the boat and put the key in my pocket.

But as we passed the candle lamp, suddenly and led us, to a sudden glimmering at my step, and I saw a girl, a spiteful little dame, keep her hair well coiled and her broad bosom, her light complexion and refined features revealed in the coolie's brother in a Chinaman's face.

I turned to the boatman, but the steward returning just then, I paid my steamer fare, and my strange acquaintance departed.

I turned in, wondering who my mysterious passenger might be, and my thoughts were not without vague imaging of the members of the crew of the steamer.

I turned in, and hardly began dressing before a herald came to inform me that the vicereyn of the province desired to see me at his "palace" at 10 this morning. The steward, who I had once run into, and had, full of vague distrust, I had almost decided with to pay to sea two hours before it was advertised time, now, and so took my chance any a plumbation, or a place for my business, a place to sleep, a place to change.

Disturbed by such doubts, I hardly slept, but when mostly a herald came to my room, the steward, who I had once run into, and had, full of vague distrust, I had almost decided with to pay to sea two hours before it was advertised time, now, and so took my chance any a plumbation, or a place for my business, a place to sleep, a place to change.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Measles are prevalent in town.

There was a heavy hail storm on Tuesday.

That is a very pretty place of pianos in

Mr. E. W. Rathbun's grounds.

Mr. Hopkins is making sundry improvements on his residence, Main street.

There was quite a display of bunting on Saturday in honour of our beloved Sovereign.

Dr. J. S. Campbell, son of Rev. A. Campbell, has located in a suburb of Rochester, N. Y.

Every resident in the town has been purchasing flowering or foliage plants during the past week.

The Ladies Aid Society of St. Mark's Church propose holding their annual bazaar on the 1st of June.

Mr. John B. Huf has purchased from Mr. George Clement the house at present occupied by Mr. T. Caulfield.

Before going on an excursion or visit call and purchase one of these cheap ready made books at THE TRIBUNE office.

Mr. Mitchell, head gardener at Mr. Herbert B. Rathbun's, is very proud of the largest pony ever grown in Deseronto.

Mr. Lou Bogart has downed Godwin, Malley and other experts and is now champion of the west end quoit club.

John Reynolds had one of his fingers pulled off by a hand in the wash factory on Wednesday. Dr. Newton effected the necessary repairs.

The water in the bay is said to be higher this year than it has been for twenty years. Some persons attribute this to the opening of the Murray canal.

Prof. Fowler, of Queen's College, Kingston, spent last Friday in Deseronto and visited the various industrial establishments. He expressed himself pleased with his visit to this busy town.

It was about this time last year that those most noted in their day, watched upon the gullible of this community. All the four are not yet dead and still victims are found for the designing.

Several students of Albert College, Belleville, find themselves frequently and irresistibly attracted to Deseronto by certain magnetic influences for which "Cupid" must be held accountable.

MAINLY FOR WOMEN.

Mrs. ELLEN is the wife of Chelton, Mass., has been appointed to fill the board the steamer yacht she has Boston harbor.

Mr. WILLIAM GULL, a celebrated London specialist, said that tight lacing was productive of bad complexion, and that a woman should not be too tight with the waist at all.

There is still a negro woman who does not know that she is free. She is totally deaf, and has never been made to understand about anything.

She—“But why is Miss C. wearing black?”

He—“She is mourning for her husband.”

“Why, she never had a husband.”

“No; that is why she mourns.”

Woman inventors appear very often on the Patent Office records, and one of them who succeeded in pushing through an improvement in an eye-glass spring is said to have made a very comfortable fortune.

The Wrights to-day are the most famous inventors in the world.

In a Maine school the other day the teacher was giving the masculine nouns for the pupils to learn, and the teacher asked the feminine nouns.

The teacher asked the girl who was the “little girl milie” to spell the word and “er—“harp,” feminine “iddle.”—Bangor Commercial.

Mrs. GARRICK has returned to her home in Meuton after a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Mrs. Stanley Egan, in Washington. Mrs. Garrick is still living in the same house.

ANNE DOOLEY, aged 13, was found at her home in New York, on Thursday, from the effects of excessive rope jumping. On Tuesday afternoon a companion of the girl remarked that she could not jump the rope 300 times without stopping. Anne accomplished this feat, but shortly afterward fell down and sprained her ankle. She was reporting for Horace Greeley in 1884, and is still furnishing the news of Westchester County to the New York papers.

THOMAS TOWNSEND is undoubtedly the oldest reporter, both in years and length of service, in the history of the New York daily paper in America. He celebrated his 50th birthday anniversary last Tuesday. He began reporting for Horace Greeley in 1841, and is still furnishing the news of Westchester County to the New York papers.

LORD ROSEBERRY has become the possessor of the musical box of the late King of the Belgians.

“Dropping the Flit.” He is by the way, said to be a great admirer of two men, Napoleon Bonaparte and Bismarck.

He disagrees with the methods of both, but admires the genius immensely, the one as a soldier and statesman and the other as a statesman.

Shortly after his conversion to Roman Catholicism, “Joe” Biggar, M. P., attended a church service and fell asleep to dream, doubtless of his former sins, and when he awoke he awoke the service to an even keel; at most all others had left the church; when upon, glancing upon the empty benches, he exclaimed: “Mr. Speaker, I move that the house be counted.”

DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES is compelled to relinquish all correspondence, except with immediate family, and to give up writing for the public.

“It is as much a fatiguing as an effort to write to a friend, and the fatigue of writing is wearing upon me, and although it cost me an effort, I feel that in justice to myself, I must throw off the load which I have been compelled to bear for so long a time.”

THE REV. DR. PARKHURST, of New York, used this remarkable language in the course of a sermon at the Madison Square Presbyterian Church: “It is as much a Christian’s duty to love his country as God. To an American, the State of New York ought to be as much a spiritual religion as the State of the Mount. It is as much the duty of a New York Christian to go to the polls election day as for him to go to the Lord’s table communion day.”

PEOPLE.
